

334

Constantine defeated the SARMATIANS

The Tervingi trusting in peace with the Roman Empire conducted a punitive expedition against their northwestern neighbors, the Sarmatians, through whose fault they had recently suffered such a serious defeat. A part of the "free Sarmatians" had probably fled in 334 to the HABS DINGIAN YANDALS under King VISIMAR. Thereupon GEBERIC led Gothic warriors into the valley of MAROS-MUREȘ River, where, according to the Origo Gothica "the GEPIDS live today." The Tervinge, "after defeating and plundering the Vandals, returned home again. The origo Gothica locates the VANDAL settlements between the rivers MARCOS - MURFES, and the Thue Körös. (Hungarian archaeologists can discover no traces of these settlements; the finds seem thoroughly SARMATIAN). Gebeke undertook this expedition to expand his realm at the expense of the Vandals

334, July 17

FIRMICUS (Sicily) is first to report solar prominences, seen during an annular eclipse

The SARMATIANS were overwhelmed by their numerically superior SLAVES and were defeated in a bloody civil war.

Most of them were admitted into the empire by Constantine, while a minority sought refuge with the Vandals.

334 War

War against SARMATIANS